I question why there needs to be a property line change. Why is this needed when it could be solved with an "easement" without changing property lines? I believe this will open a whole can of worms with just anyone deciding that they need some extra property. Please consider an easement between the necessary individuals rather than a property line change.

Also, there are rumors of opening this lot to "dry camping". If this is the eventual result, then we are totally against it. We have private roads that would not be able to handle any extra traffic that would be involved in this type of adventure. The lot itself pretty much goes downhill would not be able to handle any type of camping without significant modifications to said property. Not to mention the potential changes/damage to properties surrounding it.
